Welcome to the clickfest. I was expecting a more intellectual challenging game, but alas. It badly needs more content, and content that adds to the strategic element of the game. Perhaps this is not what the game intends to be, and you spending your time hacking away at incoming hordes is this game's original approach to castle defense. Not my cup of tea. It's basically pointless and will wear out your mouse button as well as your index finger and patience. A time waster. Nothing more. Don't pay to waste your time. Pay to have fun.

Suggestions. Add moats and other elements, make sure they can be used in combination and that certain combinations are needed to counter specific enemies. Now it's just horribly plain. Any enemy is countered in exactly the same way.

The AI of your helpers is way below par. This could be made fun too, if you would implement strategies for them to control how they fire their arrows and prioritize targets.

Above all, DON'T force players to click themselves to death. I refuse to believe it's fun for anyone to click to collect each bag of money, and each potion after the round. We are talking a hundred clicks per round here as things progress. Why would anyone want to suffer through that?? What does it add to the gameplay?? It boggles the mind.

Anyway. The game could have potential, but the entire gameplay needs to be redesigned.. I enjoy it. It's a silly time waster that looks like the old Defend Your Castle (but less rage inducing). I also prefer this art style to the crappy remake Xgen slapped up on Steam. Also, I'm not sure what happened to the guy with bad dpi settings on his mouse. Mine moves just fine.
